Angus Macinnis is Senior Associate with DibbsBarker. His experience spans the full spectrum of industrial relations, employment, antidiscrimination, and occupational health and safety law, litigious and non-litigious. Angus has conducted hearings in the Federal and Supreme Courts as well as all the specialist industrial and discrimination tribunals. He has also been involved in litigation arising from large-scale industrial disputes in which it was necessary to co-ordinate action in several different courts and tribunals. He has extensive advocacy experience and has appeared as an advocate in State and Federal Industrial Relations Commissions, and other jurisdictions, in interlocutory, trial, and appellate matters. Angus' advisory experience ranges from the development of workplace policies to the implementation of significant restructuring and workplace change. He has developed consultation strategies to assist change in both unionised and non-unionised workplaces, and has developed and delivered workplace training to employees concerning antidiscrimination and occupational health and safety requirements.
